Evolution in 120 seconds... contest!

Do you know evolution is true? Of course you do! Unless you're someone who blindly follows dogma, ignores all evidence, denies reality, and wants to stick your fingers in you ears and go LALALALALALALALALA!

So I'm happy to let you know that our very own Hive Overmind – Discover Magazine, that is – is sponsoring a contest for readers to create a two-minute video about evolution! This is a very cool idea; it forces you to be brief, pithy, and cover something quickly and, perhaps, virally.

For some reason, they picked some squid as one of the judges, but don't let that stop you. Just include something like this to make him happy and you're a shoo-in, guaranteed!*

The deadline is noon Eastern time on June 1, 2009, so get cracking! Or Kraken.

Possum Magic By Mem Fox

Grandma Poss makes bush magic. And her best trick of all is making Hush invisible. Now Hush will truly be safe from snakes.

But one day Hush wants to become visible again. Grandma Poss looks and looks, but she can't find the right magic. Then she remembers. It's something to do with food! People food—not possum food. ## Need 5 sources for your paper at 3am?

Can't remember where you found that quote? Did someone grab the last copy of the book you needed from the library? Google Book Search can help!

With midterm deadlines coming up we wanted to share tips on how Google Book Search can help with your research.

Search the full text of over 7 million books

On Google Book Search, you can search the full text of over 7 million books in 40 languages, right from your dorm room. Start your search with a title or author, or use Advanced Search to browse by language, subject, or date published.

Browse books online

When you click a book result, you'll be able to see anything from a few short excerpts to the entire book. If a book is out of copyright, you can read the whole title, download it, and print a full copy.

Dig deeper - Useful information to help your search

When you're on a book, click the "About this book" tab on the top left of the page to find a table of contents, related books, references to the book from the Web and academic sources, and even a map of places mentioned in the book.

Keep track of all your sources

With My library, create a personalized set of books that you can search and label. Labeling is a great way to keep track of sources. You can have one label for your History paper and another for that Spanish essay due last week. To start, click "Add to my shared library" under a book result or on the right-hand column when viewing a book.

Find books in your college library

For every title in Google Book Search, you'll see a link to find the book in a library. If you're connected from campus, we'll show you where you can find the book right in the stacks of your university library.

Or start browsing books by category:

[56. To be, or not to be.]

deavor to discover the train, and to show how one sentiment produces another. Hamlet, knowing himself injured in the most enormous and atrocious degree, and seeing no means of redress but such as must expose him to the extremity of hazard, meditates on his situation in this manner: Before I can form any rational scheme of action under this pressure of distress, it is necessary to decide whether, after our present state, we are to be, or not to be. That is 'he question, which, as it shall be answered, will determine whether 'tis nobler, and more suitable to the dignity of reason, to suffer the outrages of fortune patiently, or to take arms against them, and by opposing end them, though perhaps with the loss of life. If to die were to sleep, no more, and by a sleep to end the miseries of our nature, such a sleep were devoutly to be wished; but if to sleep in death be to dream, to retain our powers of sensibility, we must pause to consider in that sleep of death what dreams may come. This consideration makes calamity so long endured; for who would bear the vexations of life, which might be ended by a bare bodkin, but that he is afraid of something in unknown futurity? This fear it is that gives efficacy to conscience, which, by turning the mind upon this regard, chills the ardor of resolution, checks the vigor of enterprise, and makes the current of desire stagnate in inactivity. We may suppose that he would have applied these general observations to his own case, but that he discovered Ophelia. MALONE: Dr Johnson's explication of the first five lines of this passage is surely wrong. Hamlet is not deliberating whether after our present state we are to exist or not, but whether he should continue to live, or put an end to his life; as is pointed out by the second and the three following lines, which are manifestly a paraphrase on the first: 'Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer, &c., or to take arms.' The question concerning our existence in a future state is not considered till the tenth line: 'To sleep! perchance to dream!' &c. See R. of L. 1154. COLERIDGE: This speech is of absolutely universal interest,—and yet to which of all Shakespeare's characters could it appropriately have been given but to Hamlet? For Jaques it would have been too deep, and for Iago too habitual a communion with the heart; which in every man belongs, or ought to belong, to all mankind. LAMB (Works, vol. iii, p. 88. London, 1870): How far the very custom of hearing anything spouted, withers and blows upon a fine passage, may be seen in those speeches from Hen. V., &c., which are current in the mouths of schoolboys, from their being to be found in Enfield's Speaker, and such kind of books. I confess myself utterly unable to appreciate that celebrated soliloquy in Hamlet, beginning, 'To be, or not to be,' or to tell whether it be good, bad, or indifferent; it has been so handled and pawed about by declamatory boys and men, and torn so inhumanly natural factors such as ocean temperatures and the movements of ocean currents.

It is possible that some other hazards may become more severe or frequent if global warming occurs. If climates become warmer, it seems likely that the number of thunderstorms with extreme rainfall, tornadoes and hail, heat waves, floods and drought will increase in specific areas; while the frequency of cold waves will become rarer. The relationship between the frequency and intensity of tropical cyclones and global warming is inconclusive. Some parts of the world will probably benefit if global warming occurs, because increased rainfall and warmer temperatures will enhance conditions for growing crops, and yields of food should increase.

Nonetheless, global warming is likely to carry serious financial costs. Estimates of these costs vary depending on the impacts that are forecast, but estimates of about $US 5 trillion over the next century are common. These costs may be needed in areas such as agriculture, forestry, fisheries, water supply, energy, infrastructure, cyclone damage, drought damage, coastal protection, loss of land due to rising seas, loss of wetlands, loss of forests, loss of species, loss of human life, pollution and migration. Most of these costs will be felt in LEDCs because they are poorer and therefore have less capacity to cope with problems. It is said that the MEDCs in temperate areas may even benefit if global warming occurs, provided the extent of warming is only 2C° to 3C°, because of the improved crop yields mentioned earlier.

In December 1997, world leaders met in Kyoto, Japan, to consider a world treaty that would restrict emissions of various physical processes, including advection, convection, and diffusion in the atmosphere and ocean.

At the end of the Kyoto meeting, 38 industrialised countries agreed to cut their emissions of six greenhouse gases that were linked to global warming. An agreement was signed, which has become known as the Kyoto Protocol. Then, in July 2001, a further meeting of delegates from 180 countries was held in Bonn (Germany) to work out details of implementing the Kyoto Protocol. It was agreed in Bonn that the Kyoto Protocol would not take effect until it is ratified by 55% of the nations responsible for at least 55% of the greenhouse gas emissions. The countries (mainly MEDCs) that agree to ratify the Protocol are obliged to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide to an average of 5.2% below 1990 levels during the five-year period 2008 to 2012. Compared with not intervening, this represents a reduction of almost 30% in greenhouse gas emissions. The emissions of LEDCs will be controlled by subsequent negotiations under the climate treaty.

Opinions differ as to how effective the Kyoto Protocol will be. It has been calculated that an expected increase in global temperatures of 2.1C° by 2100 will only be reduced to an increase of 1.9C° under the Kyoto Protocol. Expressed another way, the temperature that would have been experienced in 2094 would merely be postponed by six years until 2100 under the Kyoto Protocol. For this reason, some critics of the Protocol say it is far too weak, while others argue that its financial cost ($US 150 billion to $US 350 billion annually) is not justified for the tokenistic gains that are achieved. As Lomborg (2001) comments:

Abstract. We present the infrared spectra of the Taurus dark clouds. The spectra were obtained using the United Kingdom Infrared Telescope Unit, a 4-metre diameter telescope, and the Infrared Astronomical Satellite (IRAS). ## Polly's Garden Notes

Sweet Peas at Easton Walled Gardens

Easton Walled Gardens (Easton, Lincolnshire, UK) is a wonderful find. The large estate house was torn down after WWII and the grounds and garden left to go wild. In recent years the family have begun the restoration of the grounds and gardens - a mammoth undertaking. But with wonderful results.

Though the whole estate is quite impressive, I was really taken with the rows and rows of sweet peas. I've never been able to grow them in my hot, dry, sandy soil. This was definitely sweet pea heaven! And I love how this picture came out with the gray clouds above.

We only had an hour or so to visit, but we'll be back. Do visit - it's well worth it! <http://www.eastonwalledgardens.co.uk/>

A close-up photograph of several pink, heart-shaped flowers hanging from a stem. The flowers are the central focus, with some in sharp focus and others blurred in the background. The background is a soft, out-of-focus green and brown, suggesting an outdoor setting. The overall tone is gentle and appreciative.
